Horizon

Horizon Blue Cross Blue Shield of New Jersey

Providing court-involved women with excellence in integrated healthcare and employment services.

Women in prison have long suffered because prisons and jails have often been designed by men for men. In addition, women's healthcare—as applies to medical, behavioral, including mental health and addiction, and particularly OB/GYN—has often been ignored at best or at worst been a source of maltreatment and malfeasance.

We are most grateful to the strong leadership and support of Senate President Stephen Sweeney and Assembly Speaker Craig Coughlin or their sponsorship and ongoing support of the Women's Reentry Commission. Thank you to Governor Murphy for his commitment to reentry, supporting legislative enactments that expand reentry accountability, and providing for greater prisoner releases during the Public Health Emergency. Particularly, we are indebted to the members of the Commission, who have steered The Women's Project to today's resource directory, integrated healthcare delivery system, and navigation & case management referral.

Through the clear and powerful support of women's state legislative leadership, the Women's Reentry Commission Report was issued as a critical pathway toward improving the conditions for women in prison and upon reentry. The Women's Project is an outgrowth of that report, specifically answering the need for integrated women's healthcare.

The Resource Guide provides a comprehensive survey of medical, mental health, and addiction treatment services in each of the eight (8) New Jersey Reentry Corporation county sites. Working with the leadership of The Women's Reentry Commission, NJRC case management staff, and our women's health navigators, our goal is to provide the best healthcare for women leaving incarceration and reentering the general community.

Every woman leaving Edna Mahan Correctional Facility for Women or county jails will now be able to contact Constance Kusi at 551-220-6092 or ckusi@njreentry.org to be immediately referred to a case manager and healthcare navigator, who will assist toward ensuring access to the highest level of healthcare.

Again, thank you to the entirety of the NJRC Board of Directors, Governor Murphy, Senate President Sweeney, Speaker Craig Coughlin, The Women's Legislative Leadership, The Membership of the Women's Reentry Commission, and committed women throughout the state who are assisting those women embarking upon the difficult journey from prison release to community life.

Lastly, thank you to all the women who travel this difficult path. All too often, women in prison suffer from addiction, domestic abuse, and sexual violence. Women who have survived trauma after trauma, are then retraumatized in state prison. For all those women who have the courage to take the next step, please know we stand shoulder to shoulder with you every step of the way. Please provide us an opportunity to assist and support you as you become more fully the person you are blessed to be.

WHAT IS THE WOMEN'S PROJECT?

HEALTHCARE

Healthcare for women in prison has traditionally underserved female inmates—who far too often were victims of trauma in their upbringing—in their daily lives, and particularly in prison. Women in prison historically are victims of domestic violence, sexual abuse, and addiction. The objective of The Women's Project is to provide excellence in coordinated and integrated medical and behavioral healthcare, including mental health and addiction treatment. Medical challenges include access to OBGYN services, diabetes, hepatitis B/C, and HIV/AIDS. Mental health concerns include depression, anxiety—along with their linkage to reproductive cycles—and the legacy of trauma. Addiction treatment in response to OUD (opiate use disorder) requires detoxification, residential treatment, intensive IOP (intensive outpatient), and Medication Assisted Treatment.

EMPLOYMENT & TRAINING

Employment & training for women returning from state prison and county jails is typically a difficult challenge. State licensing boards routinely ban women with criminal convictions from consideration for regulated industries, as do many national corporations. To overcome the strong bias against employing court-involved and formerly incarcerated women, The Women's Project is committed to providing for financial literacy in partnership with TD Bank, Investors Bank, and M&T Bank, entrepreneurial training through Operation Hope, and employment opportunities through the The New Jersey Business & Industry Association.

NJRC'S MISSION

The NJRC is a nonprofit organization that works with individuals returning from prison, jail, and/or probation and aims to provide them with job training and employment, addiction treatment, structured sober housing, linkage to legal services and healthcare, Motor Vehicle Commission identification, and spiritual mentoring.

Barriers to contact with children and an overall lack of communication with them contribute to what clinicians refer to as maternal distress and in turn, exacerbate mental health and substance use disorders.[1]

More than one-third of Edna Mahan inmates make requests to participate in skill building programs and are ultimately denied[9]

A survey of more than 1000 recently released individuals in the process of reentry found that nine in ten women suffered from diagnosed health conditions requiring active treatment and management.[10]

As a result of social inequities within their communities, most female inmates have minimal access to behavioral health resources outside of the prison system.[12]

More than half of 908 women surveyed at Edna Mahan reported being the victim of two types of abuse prior to incarceration—emotional, physical, and/or sexual—with nearly a third reporting having been the victim of all three.[13] Partly as a result of such trauma, many of these women also suffer from mental health and substance use disorders, with roughly half of all women in state prison systems reporting having been using a substance at the time of their offense,[14] and many reporting an inability to access addiction treatment and recovery services prior to incarceration.[15]

A growing body of research has brought the deep and lasting effects of trauma to light. In particular, a number of experts have identified how potentially traumatic experiences—such as being the victim of or bearing witness to abuse, violence, and instability—can generate a kind of toxic stress that increases the risk of several health conditions.[16] When such traumatic experiences occur during childhood, they are often referred to as adverse childhood events (ACEs) and have been shown to adversely affect brain development.[17] Such results in ACEs having the ability to hamper attention, decision-making, learning, and responses to stress.[18]

The quality and nature of treatment behind the wall has implications for treatment post-release. Among women incarcerated at Edna Mahan who wish to participate in a substance abuse treatment program, between 31 and 45 percent do not have access.[19]

40 percent of women with substance use disorders receiving treatment in state prisons nationally, only one-quarter are still receiving treatment services eight to ten months after their release.[20]

When reentering persons do receive mental and physical healthcare treatment post-release, because of a lack of health insurance, which is an endemic feature of reentry, more than one-third of those reentering will do so through emergency departments, and one-fifth through hospitalizations.[21]

Developing stronger protocols for identifying, diagnosing, and treating mental health and substance use disorders, while ensuring that the protocols utilized focus heavily on the sex-specific differences among incarcerated populations, is necessary to improve overall employment and reentry outcomes.[22]

For formerly incarcerated women, education and access to appropriate mental health treatment are likely the most significant barriers to successfully obtaining long-term employment and achieving desirable reentry outcomes.[23] The provision of behavioral health services that treat both underlying substance use and mental health disorders also contribute to an increased likelihood of success in securing full-time employment.[24]
